Who Should Attend

This training program is designed for play therapists, psychologists, social workers, counselors, psychiatrists, family therapists, school counselors, and other experienced mental health, medical, allied health, and educational professionals. The training is relevant to a wide range of clinical, developmental, and educational problems for clients throughout the lifespan. Canine and equine professionals interested in the topic are also welcome to attend. This workshop is an intermediate-level experience in how to conduct AAPT effectively and ethically.

Description

This training is designed for mental health and allied health professionals who wish to learn about the exciting field of Animal Assisted Play Therapy. Properly selected and prepared animals are incorporated into therapy sessions, while the power of play is harnessed to create a safe environment for therapeutic change. The 2 online courses and the 4-day in-person hands-on workshop that comprise this course provide an overview of human-animal interaction, animal assisted therapy, research, and the full integration of animal-assisted therapy with play therapy. The program emphasizes a relationship-based approach. The course focuses on dogs, with special experiential segments with horses. The manner of working is relevant to a number of species.

Participants in this training program will learn

- definitions in the AAI field, including for AAPT
- the guiding principles for the practice of AAPT
- the five major goal areas that are typically addressed with AAPT for clients of all ages
- how to access information about the selection of dogs
- details of observing and understanding animal body language, especially dogs and horses
- the importance of using humane, animal-friendly methods of training
- the critical importance of, and how, to build healthy relationships with therapy animals
- the role of play in therapy with clients of all ages and with a variety of problems
- how to build play and playfulness into the interactions between clients and animals
- a sound, research-based approach to animal involvement in play therapy and other forms of psychotherapy/counseling/intervention
- how to provide effective treatment while reducing risks
- to apply AAPT in a variety of settings and formats, including individual, group, and family

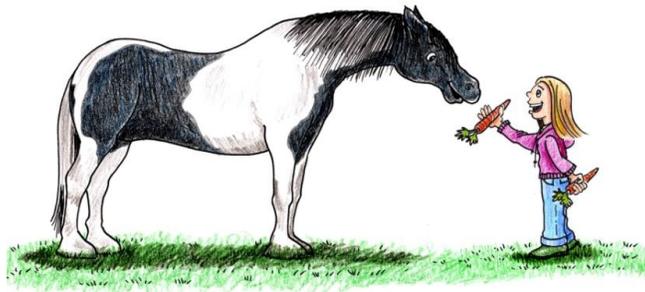

Emphasis is on the use of client-animal play interactions for therapeutic benefit. Many specific AAPT interventions are covered, including nondirective and directive play therapy, as well as AAPT approaches with varying degrees of structure. Participants learn how to conduct therapy in a manner that enhances the achievement of goals while ensuring the well-being of the animals involved. Considerable attention is paid to the facilitation and processing of therapeutic material within AAPT for a full range of client ages and problem areas.

The workshop is very hands-on. The online courses provide background that is then applied in a practical manner during the live training. Video and live demonstrations as well as experiential portions are followed by skills-practice components with encouraging feedback from the training leaders. It is expected that participants will develop competence and confidence during the workshop and will be ready to implement AAPT with an appropriate animal partner at the end of the training. Supervision for further skill development is encouraged.

The workshop gives participants a chance to explore this exciting field and learn how to develop, implement, and research their own programs. Ideas for working collaboratively with therapy dog handlers and trainers, as well as with equine specialists, are included. The workshop is limited to 10-14 participants, depending on location.

This training is for people only. Dogs and horses will be present and available for demonstration and practice segments. The Level 2 training provides opportunities to work with one's own dog.

Prerequisites

In general, participants should have prior experience conducting play therapy, including familiarity with both nondirective (child-centered) and directive play therapy approaches. They should be familiar with basic behaviorism and learning theory, and appreciate the importance of the family system. They should be comfortable around dogs. If you have questions about the prerequisites, please contact Dr. VanFleet. Those without a play therapy background, or canine/equine professionals interested in attending will be asked to read an additional book, and Dr. VanFleet can discuss your unique background and what is needed with you.

2 Prerequisite Online Courses are included in the registration fee and must be completed prior to the in-person training. Each of the online courses is eligible for 10 additional continuing education (CE) credits. The courses are Introduction to AAPT and Canine Communication for AAPT.
